Burke, Vol. 2 ON October 11, 1871, Fr. Thomas Burke went to the United States as Visitor of his Order (writes his friend and Provincial, Fr. Towers). During the sojourn, besides sermons, he gave four hundred lectures, and about was the result of his labours, many churches thus being freed from debt, and orphanages and hospitals endowed. The duties of the Office on which Fr. Burke now entered were to visit the convents of the American Province, hear the complaints of all who had small grievances to report or suggestions to make, and to frame such regulations as seemed to him expedient. Person and His Work; v. 2 Spiritual Master. Excerpt from The Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold, D.D, Vol. 2 of 2: Late Head-Master of Rugby School and Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford There is little to distinguish the next three years of Dr. Arnold's life from those which precede. The strong feeling against him, though with some abatement of its vehemence, still continued; the effect of it was perhaps visible in the slight falling off in the numbers of the school in 1837-38, at the time of the very height of its reputation at the Universities; and in his own profession it appeared so generally to prevail, that, on occasion of a proposal to him from the Bishop of Norwich (Stanley), to preach his Consecration sermon at Lambeth, the Archbishop of Canterbury (Howley) thought it his duty to withhold his permission, solely on the ground of the unfavourable reception which he supposed it would meet among the clergy. Excerpt from Thomas a Kempis, Vol. 2: And the Brothers of Common Life The founding of the new monastery, first at Westerhof - The institution of the first Canons - A pestilence in the country - The monastery transferred to Mount St. Agnes - The people of Zwolle oppose the consecration of the cemetery Memorials of several who died on the Mount - The election of John a Kempis to be Prior - Various ways in which he promoted the interests of the monastery - Events from A.D. 1399-1406 - Thomas a Kempis received into the monastery - A memorial of Wolfard the Priest - The Investment of several Brothers by Prior John - Among these of Thomas a Kempis - The form of dedicating himself wholly to God - The Deed of Profession, and the Vow of Obedience - A Kempis on religious obedience - A soliloquy of thankfulness and devotion. As Thomas a Kempis came to live in the monastery at Mount St. Agnes within a short time after the Canons Regular, of which he became one, took possession of it, and the appointment of the first Prior, the matters concerning which he writes must have been recorded by him whilst the circumstances were fresh in the minds of those living there. Afterwards he writes respecting what he himself witnessed, or was concerned or took part in. I shall therefore give these chronicles, briefly and substantially, as they are related by him. On January 18, 1398, the most Reverend Father Frederick de Brankenheim, the famous metropolitan Bishop of Utrecht, granted his license and authority to the devout priests Egbert of Linghen and Wolfard Matthias, and certain other persons - devout clerics and laymen - dwelling together in Mount St. Agnes in Nemel, near Zwolle, that, for the more fully promoting the glory of God and of holy religion, they might construct in some suitable and convenient place in the diocese, a monastery of Canons Regular, where they might worthily and devoutly serve God according to the rule of the Blessed Augustine. Excerpt from The Writings of Thomas Paine, Vol. 2: 1779-1792 Some time last winter a worthy member Of the Assembly Of this State put into my hands, with some expressions Of surprize, a motion which he had copied from an original shewn to him by another member, who intended to move it in the House. The purport Of l/zat, and the doctrine of Americanus, bear such strong resemblance to each other, that I make no hesitation in believing them both generated from the same parents. The intended motion, however, withered without being put, and Americanus, by venturing into being, has exposed himself to a less tranquil exit. Whether Americanus sits in Congress or not, may be the subject Of future enquiry at present I Shall content myself with making some strictures on what he advances. The "History of Cambridge" was originally published in 1877. Besides the historical narrative in the first volume, the second volume contains a very full and carefully compiled "Genealogical Register" of the early settlers and their descendants. These volumes are, in the most essential respects, models of what a town history should be. They contain the most important information obtainable from the sources then open to the author, and this is presented in a clear and concise narrative. In the estimation of those most competent to pass judgment, these volumes are authorities. But they are something more than authorities. They not only instruct; they inspire. Nobody deserves the privilege of growing up in this city who does not make himself familiar with these books. They are epitomes of the history, not only of this town, but of a good many other Puritan towns. It fills this place with memories of by-gone scenes and deeds which were precious to the people of those times, and are precious still to us, their descendants or successors. Excerpt from The Complete Works of Thomas Manton, D.D., Vol. 2 The publication of a complete and uniform edition of Manton's works is a great boon to the readers of English theology. Many of his best writings have been hitherto inaccessible to all who have not long purses and large libraries. The few who know him would gladly testify, I am sure, that Thomas Manton was one of the best authors of his day, and that his works richly deserve reprinting. The republication of this great divine's writings in their present form appears to demand a few prefatory remarks. What are Manton's special merits? What claim has a man of the seventeenth century on the attention of 1871? What good thing is there about him that we should buy him and read him? These are reasonable questions, to which I propose to supply an answer in the following brief essay. A calm examination of Manton's real worth appears a suitable accompaniment to a new edition of Manton's works. The inquiry, it must be admitted, is not an easy one. The materials for forming a judgment are singularly few and scanty. Two hundred years have passed away since Manton was laid in the grave. He died in an age when his principles and his party were very unpopular, and few cared to be known as his friends and admirers. Except the long and exhaustive biography of him by Harris, which has been wisely reprinted in this edition, we possess little information about him. All other impressions about him must be based on a patient analysis of his voluminous posthumous works. Considerable familiarity with these works forms my principal claim on the reader's attention in sending forth this essay. Let me clear the way by considering an objection which is frequently brought against Manton and other divines of his school. That objection is that he was "a Puritan." I admit the fact, and do not deny it for a moment. A friend and associate of Baxter, Calamy. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Excerpt from The Life of Thomas Ken, D.D, Vol. 2 of 2: Deprived Bishop of Bath and Wells, Seen in Connection With the Spirit of the Times, Political and Religious, Particularly Those Great Events, the Restoration, 1660, and Revolution of 1688, Including the Period of Fanatical Puritanism, From 1640 to the Dea The life of the great and good man whose character I have attempted to dehneate, naturally divides itself into three distinct parts, namely, from his birth to his first preferment in the church; 2ndly, his short day of prosperity, to his retirement; and, 3rdly, his years of retirement, to his lonely grave, apart from all his connections and friends. During the progress of printing this work, illustrative of so eminent and virtuous a character in the Church of England, I have often sighed to myself, Quorsum? But all events are in the hands of an over-ruling Providence. I have done my duty in this day of "rebuke" and obloquy.
