A first responder may encounter a wildlife crime anywhere in the field at any time. Upon interception of the crime, the first responder will be confronted with various types of evidence including digital and electronic evidence. Why is digital and electronic evidence important to a first responder? There is information generated in the process of using mobile phones or computers which is stored in these devices that is of potential evidentiary value. This information and the devices in which it is stored are fragile and hence, the first responder needs to understand the process of collecting, preserving and submitting it for forensic examination. This Guide is intended to assist frontline wildlife law enforcers upon whom the responsibility of preserving a crime scene and collecting evidence may fall, if there is no investigator available. The guide addresses the handling of digital and electronic evidence in hopes that the first responders will be able to collect and preserve this very important form of evidence for successful wildlife crime investigations and prosecutions. In this informative guide, Thomas Dixon argues that you do not have to be a genius to get a first at university. He sets out to de-mystify first-class degrees in the arts, humanities and social sciences, clearly articulating the difference between the excellent and the merely competent in undergraduate work. This concise, no-nonsense guidebook will give prospective and current students advice on teaching and learning styles that prevail in university and on how to manage their two most important resources - their time and their lecturers. In an accessible and entertaining style, the author looks at subjects such as: making the transition from school to university developing transferable skills making use of lectures and seminars using libraries and the Internet note-taking, essays, seminars and presentations common mistakes to avoid writing with clarity and style revision and examinations. Illustrated with many examples from a range of academic disciplines, How to Get a First is an all-purpose guide to success in academic life.
